

Once a common animal in native grasslands, the Eastern Barred Bandicoot is now an endangered species. This nocturnal species rest in grass-lined nests during the day and come out at night to forage in the grasslands for their favourite foods – worms, grubs, and beetles.