

This colourful and cheeky bird has become a common species found in the urban landscape. Our urban forests provide them with nectar and pollen (their favourite!), but they also love fruit, seeds, and insects. Look out for them nesting in tree hollows in local parks and along waterways.